Online INDUCTION

Our online inductions are a straightforward, convenient and cost-effective way to ensure your employees and contractors are aware of export control regulations.

Created by market experts and developed in line with industry best practice, the training provides an introduction to the regulations and requirements of defence export controls including ITAR and EAR.

The program is suitable for anyone new to export control, or as a refresher for those already dealing with controlled goods and/or technology. It is designed to be simple and easy for the learner, whilst building a strong foundation of knowledge.

Conveniently accessed through our online Training Management Platform, components can be tailored to include your company details and industry specific examples. The course is competitively priced catering for small to large organisations and their supply chains.

Face-to-Face TRAINING

Our face-to-face training offers a more in-depth look at the complex rules and regulations around export control.

This workshop provides an introduction to export control, addresses the difference between Australian and US requirements, and unpacks the unique aspects, agreements and regulations for both countries.

Delivered by our resident ITAR and EAR specialists, this training program is invaluable for companies and employees to build knowledge and organisational capacity in the compliance process.

Training can be tailored to concentrate on any specific areas of concern or to include your terminology and specific examples.

Audits and CONSULTING

Export controls are more regulated now than ever before and the penalties for getting it wrong can be substantial.

We provide skilled consultants to audit your existing processes and procedures and assess your compliance with the regulations. Through this review we can identify gaps in your operations and provide clear recommendations to address any issues.

If you don't have documented processes, we can assist you to create and implement a management system tailored to your company's needs.

Our subject matter experts can mentor and coach your staff throughout this process to ensure they have the right skills, support, and tools to successfully operate once the consultation period is complete.
